The upcoming three-day GSCN workshops on computational stem cell biology from 7 – 9 April 2025 in Berlin will be divided into one workshop for beginners with trainer Sara Jimenez and one workshop for advanced users with trainer Tim Treis (both lab Fabian Theis, Helmholtz Munich). Both workshops still have open spots: They will have two days of teaching and practice on their own level and one day with shared lectures. The venue will be the Rahel Hirsch Center in Berlin (Luisenstr. 65 in Berlin Mitte) The complete program, registration, schedule and all information can be found here.

3. 14 March: UniStem Day all over Germany

UniStem Day will take place in Germany, Europe and worldwide on 14 March 2025 – students with biological interest gather for lectures, discussions, games and workshops about stem cell research and meet “real” stem cell researcher. In Germany it is a special event for the stem cell community and always an annual highlight for public engagement: Institutes in Aachen, Berlin, Bielefeld, Bochum, Bonn, Düsseldorf, Essen, Dresden, Hannover, Jena, Köln, Münster, Munich, Ulm, Witten/Herdecke are engaging more than 1000 teenager in 2025. The GSCN started UniStem Day in Germany in 2016.

4. GSCN Mentoring Program 2025-2026

Do you want to focus on your career but can't decide which next step will be the right one? Maybe an experienced mentor could help you with considerations from another point of view. GSCN offers a one-year mentorship program, where a young scientist teams up with a mentor to form a tandem and is able to discuss future considerations. If you are interested, you find more information here. The deadline for applications is 31 May 2025. Spread the word.

Stay tuned with the GSCN with our newsletter, the website (www.gscn.org), and on LinkedIn.
Best wishes, the GSCN Team
